

1 legislation than does the other house to which it is 2 ultimately referred.

3 Twenty-five percent of the vetoes of the 4 Governor of this State are based generally on flaws in 5 language, bad, sloppy, inaccurate language and drafting,
6 or on rulings of unconstitutionality. Does this suggest 7 that a bicameral body is necessarily more careful? I think 8 it suggests the contrary.

9 I came to this convention a bicameralist. I have 10 long been a student of state legislatures and long been 11 interested in the operation of the legislative branch of 12 government. I was convinced before I came here that bi-13 cameralism provided a great advantage to the people in terms
14 of its representative qualities. Someone has suggested
15 the fact that during this Convention I suffered a bi-16 cameral disease may have changed my opinion, nonetheless
17 I have become convinced since being here and looking again
18 at this question that if we want to establish in this 19 State an effective legislature, if we want to have a legis-20 lature in which the public can have confidence, if we 21 want a legislature in which we can see who is doing what
